

TwelveStone Health Partners with VirtueRN to Develop Innovative Post-Acute Technology Platform

Companies Working Together to Address Chronic Care Patients Need for DME, Infusion and Medication Services Through Streamlined Workflow

TwelveStone Health Partners, a leading provider of post-acute chronic care medication services, and VirtueRN, a post-acute healthcare technology company, have joined forces to develop a post-acute technology platform. It will address the fragmented market for medical equipment and medication services that exists among organizations who communicate orders, service providers and patients who need them in post-acute care environments. Once developed, the new solution is expected to streamline workflow processes and increase the level of communication that occurs across the continuum of post-acute care.

“Technology offers the opportunity to ensure that patients get what they need faster and more efficiently,” says Shane Reeves, chief executive officer of TwelveStone Health Partners. “Our understanding of the players and shortcomings regarding post-acute medication service delivery, combined with VirtueRN’s technology prowess and knowledge of the post-acute care market, makes the combination a natural partnership opportunity.”

TwelveStone believes that VirtueRN’s “head start” in creating their own platform will facilitate getting to market more rapidly and reduce overall project investment.

“We applaud TwelveStone for their interest in finding ways to leverage technology to address short-comings in the post-acute market,” says Gibran Ameer, chief executive officer of VirtueRN. “We look forward to leveraging our expertise and applying it to TwelveStone’s business.”
